HEATY ARRIVALS OF QUARTEMASTR'S STORES.—Immense quantities of blankets, overcoate, flannel shirts, and other articles for cur freope, arrived on Thursday last. They were beginning to be very much needed, and no doubt highly acceptable to the boys in camp during the last-two days and nights, which seem more like late November weather than September. All troops will now be supplied with complete truffits, as rapidly as they may arrive. A portion of the guns nitpod for the Illinois regiments have also arrived, and will probably be at once distributed to the troops in camp. They are of the very bost Harper's Ferry make of rifled muskets, perfectly new and superior to the English Enfeld rifle. They are a splendid arm, and have long been teeded for purposes of drill. TUESDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1801. N. First has hed fiften companies or his regiment. It is probable that a giment will be ordered to week.

Mr. Howard Paul, one of the passengers open of the Persia, furnishes us with the fo

Sociock a M., two hindred and twelve miles from Queenstown. On approaching her the passenger's of the Persia observed that she was rolling very much, but had no idea of her condition, which a nearer view afforded. It was found that she had loud both of her padde wheels, the whole of the boats (with the exception of two) on her port sides were stove in er disabled, and, the rudder head being carried sway, she was steering for home with the rudder chains. Large ropes were stretched from bulwark to bulwark for the passengers to cling to, and the rolling was so fearful that one moment the great ship revealed the whole of her decks at a most distressing angle, and the next the hige was plainly visible. On discovering the plight of the vessel, Captain Juckins holsted a signal—"Do you require aid?" which was only replied to by a large board being displayed on the paddle box; but the characters thereon being so small the writing could not be deciphered. The Great Eastern still kept on her course, working with her screw, and for twenty minutes the Persis followed her in order to get an answer to her signal. The passengers of the Great Eastern this her, all of whom seemed straining anxiously forward to catch a view of the Fersia. Tas laddes waved their bandkerchiefs, the men their hats, and, nowithstanding the extraordinary roll of the vessel, the utmost enthusi-rife the horses must have been literally dashed to pieces. Many of the seagoing passengers on board the Fersin gave it as their deliberate opinion that they never in the great-est storm saw any vessel roll so whilly as the Great Eastern did. By the next stoamer from England we hope to be able to report the safe ar rival of the passengers, many of whom were American. It is surious circumstance this at the London office of the Great Eastern mome of the capt. A gentleman on board of the Persia called their and asked the quantum for the Fersia called their and asked the quantum. The suply was—"they did not know." The officer in charge of the vessel was Captain Walker, formerly of the Adriatic. She left Liverpool on Wednesday, September 11, and when met by the Persia had been, therefore, five days out.

And of all places to derive these homilies, texts and sermons, there is no better place than the Watch House at miduight, provided than the Watch House at midnight, provided your nerves are not sensitive. A few nights since we spent a brief time there watching the atrange life, with its harrowing sights and fearful seunds. As we sat there, the door opened, and two pollecamen dragged in a woman in the last stages of intorication, her clothing bedanbed with mire and hanging to her in shreds; her hair streaming wildly over her face; clutching with one hand an empty whish by bottle in her bosom, and with the other arm classing a babe tightly to her, which arm clasping a babe tightly to her, which smiled in innocent unconsciousness of the great misery which must attach to its future.

A middle-aged man, beamcared with blood, flowing from ugly cuts upon his head, and a young man, typitylag a monster of drunken desperation, made up this party. They were found, so the officer in attendance informed us, in a locked room, fighting savagely. The next that came in was an African, ine-briated to a point which brought cut all the mirthful qualities of that race, and induced a discordant performance of sundry Ethiopian, staves, and an extempere Jubs, coupled with constant iterations of his indifference as to any fature disposition of "dis yere nigge." Again there is a commotion at the outside door and this time six policemen drag in a man by main force. He is a gigantic man, with heavy black whiskers, his thick hair mat-ted down to his face, his eyes staring wildly, kera thickly fiaked with the foam which oozes between his tightly set teeth. He is in the delirium tremens and struggles with all the fury of a tiger. He is thrown to the floor and the six strong policemen with the utmost difficulty hold the maine down while another fettdee his armsjand limbs. He is then carried into a cell. In the mean time the various cells are a miniature Fandersonium. In one, a knot of courtezars, of all God's creatures the most pitiable sights, spurned by all good and branded with shame by all pure, shock the sar with obscentities, sing coarse songs and with stale jest and hollow laughter drive away the thoughts of the present. In snother, women picked from the ditchessiahs and kennels of back yards and alleys are giving vent to horrible blasphemies and uncartibly bowlings. Drunken men in all stages, from jelly and mandilir to raving and furious, produce a concatenation of sounds which might allence even Babel itself. And thus the night wears on, and every night brings a repe-

dark side of human nature, is abundant food for the thoughtful and texts without stint. Would our ciergy indite sermons upon human nature, here is the place. Every instinct, every passion, every development of human nature for the worse, may be found in its full fruition. The theme is a suggestive one and invites study.

By some means she caught her right arm is the machinery, and before she could be rescued from her pertious position, her arm was so badly crushed as to render amputation necessary. In the reflexts to save herself, she also caught the thumb of her left hand in the machinery and completely tore is from the hand, carrying with it the cords and tendens nearly to the cibow. Amputation was performed upon the thumb, but it is feared that the amputation of that arm will also be necessary. The surgery was performed skilfully by Dr.

In the apring of 1850, Webde he restered Colby's office one day and told hum that he had a contract for macadamizing that atreet, and requested Mr. Colby to take an interest in it. Colby examined the matter and concluded to do so.

Mr. Runsey: "Were you an Alderman at that time?"

Mr. Colby: "No, sir, nor at any other that time?"

Mr. Colby: "No, sir, nor at any other when I had a contract from the city. We went to the Comprision of the contract transferred from Webber to Ellithorpe and myself. Ward refused to assign it without at the reason he wend not transfer it was that Webber was a defaulter to the city and they proposed to hold the contract as security for his indebtodases.

Subsequently, the Mayor and Mr. Ward were permanded to permit a transfer, Webber's delatestion being one-third of the property to secture. The contract was then assigned by Webber to me. The reason that Webber wanted to seeing it was that he had no means of earrying it out. I did not consider there was any impropriety in Ward's transferring. Our momey had done all the work, and I am not think the city had any right to held are property to secure somebedy else's defailations. The understanding was that Webber should have a portion of the profits in consideration of the assignment.

Mayor Runney.—" What share was Webber to receive?"

Magor Immere—"will share was needed to receive?"

Mr. Colby—" The arrangement was this. I was to fursish so much money: Ellithorpe so much and Webber so much, and upon these conditions he was to have one third of the profits. The arrangement was not fulfilled on Webber's part.

Magor Rumasy—"Dida"! you and Ellithorpe and Webber, all three figure together to get that contract from the city? and dida' you get it by using Webber for that purpose?

Mr. Colby—"No, all "!"

Air. Emithorpo.—We arread to pay over, one-third of the profits to Webber, and that meant incibing. We took Ward that Webber had untiling in the concern. If three men go into partnership, and one puts in nothing, it is plain that if the profits are divided according to the investment, that man will get nothing. I think that the Comptroller in making this assignment was guilty of mallesance bosonse the disposaceased the city of the means of getting the pay out of Webber.
